

Stephanie Keeling is an Associate Professor of Medicine in the Division of Rheumatology at the University of Alberta. She is a clinical rheumatologist, with a general rheumatology clinic, a cardiovascular risk reduction clinic for inflammatory rheumatic diseases since November 2010 and a lupus clinic and lupus dermatology clinic since October 2008. She conducts clinical research associated with her clinics and completed a Master's in Experimental Medicine under the supervision of Walter Maksymowych in 2009 with a thesis investigating a screening questionnaire for inflammatory back pain. She is the local principal investigator for 2 phase 2 lupus trials and is an active teacher of medical students, residents and fellows.